SIGHTS · KIATO & SIKYONIA

Hadrian’s Aqueduct / Vochaikos Channel

Hadrian's Aqueduct was built around AD 130 under the philhellene emperor Hadrian to carry water from the springs of Stymphalia all the way to ancient Corinth, following a remarkable route of some 85 kilometres across rugged mountain terrain. A surviving stretch runs through the plain of Kiato, known locally as the Vochaikos Channel, a testament to the sophisticated hydraulic engineering of the Roman era.

Useful information

Entrance	Free

Take it with you

Navigate with Google Maps

Open this page on your phone visitkiato.com/en/axiotheato/hadrians-aqueduct-vochaikos

Enjoy Kiato and Sikyonia!